

Jonathan Lopez

Writing for Engineers

Elisabeth von Uhl

5/18/20

The Final Project assignment is one of the most unique final projects I have done so far. This is mainly done to how this was done since there was no physical interaction like how one would expect. However, that did not stop me from trying to do this to the best of my ability and achieving a good grade. The beginning of this project was a little rocky at the start due to the lack of communication I had with some of my assigned groupmates. In addition, one of our members has told us they will not help us with this assignment and that the group will have to find an alternative. We initially did not know what to do since we did not have any form of communication and but that changed with our first group conference.

Once we all were able to join an area of communication and inform our professor of the situation, she helped establish a sense of order within our group. After this, we were assigned two more members and had a way of communicating with each other. However, this was only the beginning of our endeavor to make a successful project with a lack of motivation. This lack of motivation came from not knowing what would be our topic, not knowing we even existed, or not being used to the remote learning environment. However, we all decided to hunker down, at least enough to have a meeting and discuss what we will do. One of the group members said his idea and we all liked it due to its simplicity and seemingly easy task. However, our habits of lack of communication and sense of urgency came back to us and we did not accomplish much. Soon after we received our submission date, we had one more meeting and assigned tasks and did them on time to get our video out! However, we still did not escape this situation yet and had to write our paper. This was the biggest obstacle in our project due to everything seemingly reverting to the beginning. We stopped communicating with one another and forced each other to work and contribute. This led to a very lackluster paper, but a paper nonetheless.

Although this assignment was very difficult in many ways, I was happy to go through this and this will help me know what the future will be like. Sometimes you do not get the most efficient group and this shows but if you can pull together for a common goal, then seemingly anything can be done.